BURNING OAK, NOVEMBER

Yesterday, the sky in mute horizontal swaths, air almost too thick to breathe.
We found the stump of an old oak, man-sized, burning without flame at the edge of a clearing—splintered wood raw, bulldozed roots exposed—even the black ants fled in the stink of old grief made public and final, old hopes exposed—past tense!—now headless leafless a stump knocked half out of the earth and the soul just blue smoke vague and slow-spreading rising without grace into an indifferent sky no one will paint, or photograph, or see—

except us: yesterday.
